This mass of human beings moved slowly up the steps toward the rotunda, all anxiors to see the remains. Policemen kept the spectators in line, and as they passed by the corpse, found exit on the east side. The rotunda was heavily draped. At half-past eleven the crowd about the capitol was larger than ever witnes ed before, not excepting during the noted impeachment trial of Ex-President Johnson, and it was estimated that five thousand persons, at least, could not gain admission, even to the corridors of the senate galleries. When the house returned from the when and women can reach. While indulging in these hopes and aspirations, I would like to present another thought. Let us do justice to the over-burdened, hard-pressed tax-payers of Memphis. Our public debt la large, our business and property taxes are beavy, in fact they are almost unbearable. The great bulk of these taxes are paid by a com-paratively small number of persons, the merchants and large property owners. While our children, to make them betwhere they will be guarded until the funeral, the services of which will be short and simple. ter members of society, and better fit them for usefulness in life—are being educated with means thus obtained, we should and must give all due thanks and praise to our patient, public spirited people, who, fer the greater good in the future, pay taxes for the education of poor and rich, black and white alike. True, our school taxes are the lightest part, almost trivial, in comparison with our other public taxes. I believe about one-twentieth part of the taxes the people of Memphis pay are for the support of the public schools. Small as they are, they are our only depen-dence for buying ground, building school-houses and for support of the schools. as they are, they are our only dependence for buying ground, building schools. The school-board has no revenues of its own, has no taxing power, no means to pay teachers and carry on these schools, except as taxes are levied and collected under the mandates and re-quirements of our school charter, by the mayor and general council of the city. The school-board is but a subordinate branch of the city government, charged only with the duty of providing schoolhouses, employing teachers and carry-ing on the schools, as means are people, we must be tow that degree of education upon ourselves that makes us to know right and wrong. All should strive to do good to our fellow-beings, and avoid evil-doing. It was a matter of great satisfaction and congratulation that this makes had been sent to the satisfaction and congratulation and congratulation are constant. that this school had been built, where all opportunities for education and intel-

TURNER HUNT should be a day of great rejoicing and remembrance among the colored race of Memphis. White and colored, and all Yesterday one of the most interesting concluded with an appeal to the colored purents to support the schools and send their children to them. MAYOR LOAGUE lieve a citizen could be found who did not cheerfully pay his quota of school-tax, and he impressed it upon the minds of the children present, that the day would be looked back to by them as one of the happiest in their lives. If they would be governed, controlled and divised by their teachers, and be virtuous, honest and good, they could sspire to anything in the gift of the country.

REV. MR. PHILLIPS said the colored people were entering upon a new era. History showed that without education there was barbarism, and it was the duty of parents to appre-ciate the blessings of knowledge. As long as the colored race was in ignorance, in consequence of the neglect and carelessness of parents, that race would be hewers of wood and drawers of water. At the last city election, there were places left vacant for colored men, but being incompetent for want of education, they were not put into them. He urged the children to lay hold of education, which would fit them to aspire to the highest places, and make them the peers of any and every one.

SUPERINTENDENT PICKETT believed this was the day spoken of by the prophet, when he said: "Ethiopia shall stretch forth her hand and become high among the nations of the earth." It was indeed a proud day for the colored people. The parents stood at one end of a line and the ored, particularly near bering about one hundred and fifty men, are to have, and are having, benefits stood at one end of a line and the headed by Fred Douglass and ex-Lieut. and advantages their parents never en-Gov. There was a pear lief way, and equality was in reach of the humblest aspirant. To attain this was the object of the Clay-street school and like buildings. The new edifice, he there is no station in life to which you said, was fine, admirably arranged, and may not aspire. Among statesmen and profound thinkers at this day, the value of public schools is conceded. They are the greatest inducement to immigration and growth of city or country; the chief protection against vagrancy and conclusion he said if a publi should be chief protection against vagrancy and conclusion he said if a pupil should be crime. The building presents a handsome appearance and is arranged admirably for light and comfort. In the first story, the entrance being on Clay street, are rooms 1, 2, 3 and 4, a wide hall dividing the first two from the last. Each of these rooms has four windows, is well ventilated, and heated by a stove. The seats for the scholars are of the "Excelsior" pattern, double. Communicating with each room is a narrow closet, which-for it is the width of e apartment and five feet wide—there is ample arrangement for hats, cloaks, umbrellas, etc., not forgetting a wash sink and towel rack. In the second story are rooms 5, 6, 7 and 8, and another for the princi-pal, cut off from the south end of the wide hall, and furnished with desks and seats. In all the rooms there are accommodations for five hundred children. and by the half-day system, which has been adopted, two hundred more can be accommodated.

THE CLOSE. After the children were seated the G. Smith, one and all, old and young, white and black, joined in three rousing cheers, the band playing an appropriate air. The schools will open on Monday at the usual hour. The following are the names and numbers of the ms of the several teachers: (White)
